Hundreds of different species of plants and animals have arrived in the United States. This number has increased greatly as international travel and business have increased. Some of these new “31” have caused problems for agriculture or the environment. The Mediterranean fruit fly, 32, arrived in California on some imported fruit in 1970s. In its original home, it had never caused much damage. In California, however, it 33 so quickly that the California fruit industry was soon in trouble. The government had to take serious measures to try to kill the flies, but have not managed to get rid of them altogether.

Sometimes the damage caused by an immigrant species is not measurable in dollars. It may not harm us directly, but it may change the environment. And that may cause problems for the 34 plants or animals that were living there before. Loosestrife is a plant that came to North America sometime in the 19th century. It may have been carried as seeds on the back of some sheep from Europe, or someone may have brought the seeds to plant in their garden. 35, loosestrife now grows along rivers and lakes all over North America. It is a pretty plant, but when a lot of loosestrife grows in one place, other plants cannot grow there.

“We’re living in an increasingly macro-world 37 our lives are conducted on a grand scale,” he says. “Every day, we’re told about economic situation in China, the financial crisis in Europe, 38 we need bigger cars and TVs or more Facebook friends. To make yourself happy, you should get away from all this pressure and 39 the fundamental, simple, positive things- the sensual beauty around us.” Professor Peter Totterdell, a psychologist, also says a small joy can bring happiness indefinitely. 四、閱讀測驗【請在下列各題中選出最適當的答案】

第一篇：

American writer Mark Twain once said, “Whoever is happy will make others happy, too.” In 2005, a group of psychologists set out to prove that in a unique social experiment conducted in a typical UK town named Slough. The goal of the experiment was to raise the overall “happiness level” of Slough by focusing on 50 volunteers and training them intensively in the art of living happily. The researchers theorized that, by learning life-skills to improve personal feelings of happiness, the 50 volunteers would bring the newfound skills and attitudes back into the community and change its mood for the better. They devised a 10 point plan for happiness, which included: caring for a plant, counting your blessings, taking time to talk, meeting an old friend, taking time to enjoy a treat, having a good laugh, getting some exercise, sharing a smile, cutting TV viewing in half, and performing an act of kindness for a stranger.

The volunteers attended many workshops and seminars, but they were also coached in unorthodox techniques, such as spontaneous dancing in the supermarket, hugging a tree, and visiting a graveyard to reflect on the preciousness of life. Over a period of three months, the researchers helped the volunteers in a number of ways. In the end, whether the town was made measurably happier or not was subject for debate. However, what is not arguable is that being happy is more than a state of mind; it is a skill that can be learned and cultivated.

Many people, for example, think that a higher salary, increased fame, or winning a lottery might be the key to happiness. What was revealed in the study was that people whose happiness depended upon such things were looking in the wrong places because happiness comes from within. One of the most important ideas uncovered in the study is a very old truth, i.e. to be truly happy, people must closely examine their personal definition of “happiness.”

What is inflation? Inflation is often called “too many dollars chasing too few goods.” It’s when prices in a country rise across the board. If the prices of your snack, bread, gasoline, and many other things all rise at the same time, that’s inflation. Inflation means your money buys less than it used to.

Experts have different views on why and how inflation happens. One reason for inflation is an increase in the supply of money. Generally, when the supply of something goes up, the demand for it goes down. In other words, its value goes down. So when there is a lot of money circulating, each piece of money becomes less valuable. Another cause of inflation is a rise in production costs. This means it costs more money to make a particular product. The price of a candy bar may go up if the nuts in it are suddenly more expensive or if the workers making it are paid higher wages. Higher taxes can also cause inflation. When items are taxed, people who produce goods don’t want to see their profits go down. Instead, they raise their prices. This is called “transferring the burden to the consumer.”

Inflation is complicated. Track the prices of some goods you are interested in, and see if you can understand why they’ve changed over time.
