(一) After a tight loss to Japan on Friday, the Taiwan team crashed out of the World Baseball Classic yesterday (March 9, 2013) after losing to Cuba 14-0 in a mercy rule-shorthanded game. Chinese Taipei beat the Kingdom of the Netherlands and Australia in the first round to advance to Tokyo. They exited the Classic having lost their final three games against Korea (to close out the first round), Japan and Cuba. (15分)

(二) Almost two decades, Japan's economic fortunes have deteriorated, and little seemed to be done about it. But in the last few months, the nation's new Prime Minister, Shinzo Abe, has pushed policy makers and other officials to take bold steps. Their handiwork was evident when the yen hit 100 to the dollar for the first time in four years, and the economy grew at a robust annualized pace of 3.5 percent in the first quarter.

A weaker yen helped Japanese exports grow 3.8 percent, pushed higher by strong shipments of cars and other manufactured goods to the United States.

"Abenomics is about coming out on top in global competition," Mr. Abe said. "We're finally seeing a correction of the excessively strong yen."

Toyota Motor reported this month (May, 2013) that annual net income had jumped threefold, and Sony produced an annual profit for the first time in five years.

Perhaps more important, particularly for the citizens of Japan, the yen's move is expected to kindle inflation in the once moribund economy. (20分)
